The Birmingham Campaign and “Letter from Birmingham Jail”

In 1963, King led the Birmingham campaign, targeting one of the most segregated cities in America. The campaign’s strategy involved coordinated sit-ins, marches, and boycotts aimed at ending discriminatory hiring practices and segregation laws. King’s arrest during this campaign resulted in the composition of his “Letter from Birmingham Jail,” a profound defense of civil disobedience that remains a cornerstone of civil rights literature.

This campaign brought national attention to the brutality faced by African Americans in the South and contributed directly to the passage of the Civil Rights Act of 1964. The act outlawed discrimination based on race, color, religion, sex, or national origin, marking a significant legislative victory linked closely to King’s activism.

Despite his assassination in April 1968, the campaign continued under the leadership of other activists, emphasizing his enduring influence.
